August they led to extensive and most disstrong inundations, productive of wideestimated that upwards of 20,000 persons have been rendered homelan, that thousands of lives have been lost, that 48 houses and nine bridges have been swept away and upwards of over 90,000 houses flooded. The Japanese Gevernment are, as usual, rising to the occasion, and sending relief, but it is sad to think of the suffering that must be endured by these patient people. Though Japan has not her special "Sorrow" in the shape of a river constantly overflowing and desolating the country like the Yellow River, she has numerous rivers which, from the conformation of the water-shed, are most aucertain and treacherous. At one time wide shallow beds of boulders and sand with a small clear stream meandering along, twisting from side to side, often narrow enough for a schoolboy to jump, after heavy rains they become suddenly transformed into boiling torrents sweeping along bank-full, then overflowing, and laying wide tracts of fertile tillage lands under water. Such disseters are, however, not so constant as the overflows of the Yellow River, neither are they, it seems to us, so preventible. Some thing might, however, surely be do by the Japanese, by deepening these shallow water-courses and thus giving the water " broad and deep channel in which to flow. At present the track of some of these rivers is only distinguishable from the adjoining and by its sandy barrenness, being bardly depressed at all, and others are dry through pay to cut a deeper channel for these streams is a matter on which we hesitate to offenta
